Good Eats

Images can make words seem much clearer. A chart is one way that readers can make inferences that are easier than text. Look at the text below and then the chart below it, then answer the questions.

One hundred children were asked what their favorite foods were. Sixteen answered that pizza was their favorite while eighteen said that their favorite food was hot dogs. Surprisingly, six children answered that broccoli was their favorite while not so surprisingly; thirty-six said ice cream was their favorite. Hamburgers and peanut butter sandwiches each had twelve votes. Which food would you have voted for?

Which food was voted for the most times?

Which food was voted for the least amount of times?

Which foods were voted for equally?

Is looking at the image of the chart easier than reading the text to find the answers?
Why or why not?

Is looking at the image of the chart easier than reading the text to find the answers?

Why or why not? (ANSWERS WILL VARY, but students should recognize that the chart is a much easier than the text to find the answers) The chart is easier than reading the text because the information is presented in a quick and easy manner. The text has many numbers, making it hard to remember which food was what number.
