How Structure Leads to Style

Though reading a great story can feel like magic, writers actually put a great deal of thought and planning into their stories. Consequently, stories can be as different in style as the people who write them. Consider the two stories you have just read, in particular their structures. Fill in a diagram for each story. Then, on a separate sheet of paper, compare and contrast how the structure of each story contributes to its meaning and style.

What is the structure of the story: Milieu, Idea, Character or Event? Explain.
