

Narrative Conclusions

Read the story idea below. Then write two possible concluding statements or sections for the story.

A girl skips school to hang out at the beach. She goes to her favorite secluded place, and lays out on a towel in her bathing suit. Around noon there is a weird eclipse; something enormous passes in front of the sun, and explodes. The flash momentarily blinds her, and when she is able to see again, the air around her is full of shimmery particles. Frightened, she goes home. No one else seems to have noticed anything. The next day at school, someone asks her to hand them a book. She looks over at the book and it rises in the air of its own accord. She quickly snatches it before anyone can see. This is only the beginning of the new powers that she realizes she has. She start fires, and freeze water with her mind. She can send bolts of energy through the air to knock things out of her way, as well as electromagnetic pulses. She keeps her powers a secret until one day, on the deserted beach once again, she receives a telepathic message from someone who says that he is an alien being held prisoner by the U.S. military on earth, and begging her for help. The girl enlists her best friend, whose father is in the military, to help her get on base. There, she uses her various powers to gain entry to the facility where she senses that the alien, who has continued to call to her telepathically, is being held. Finally, they come face to face.
