

Start the Discussion!

A good book group discussion starts with a thought-provoking question. The best questions come from things that you think about or feel as you read the book.

YOUR ASSIGNMENT: Develop a list of opening questions for your next book discussion group. Write down possible questions as you read. Then, when you have finished the book and reflected on it for a while, choose the question that you think will generate the most interesting group discussion, and write that question at the bottom of the page to bring to class.
