Roger wanted a pet pigeon. His parents didn't have a problem with Roger getting a pet, but they thought a pigeon was a rather odd choice. Roger's mother was hoping he might like something small that wouldn't grow any more, like a gerbil. "Pigeons are small," Roger told her, "and a pigeon won't get any bigger." His father suggested a dog. "Dogs are great companions," he told his son. "You can train a dog to do things." "You can train a pigeon to do things," Roger said. "What on earth would we do with a pigeon!" his mother finally cried. Roger wouldn't budge. He stuck with his original idea. He genuinely wanted a pigeon. "I'll keep it in a cage, when he's not out flying around, that is," Roger told her. His mother looked faint. "I think I'll name my new pet Angel," Roger mused...
