Writing a paragraph can be very much like making your favorite sandwich. You start with a slice of bread (your topic sentence); then you fill it with yummy meat, veggies, and condiments (the details). You finish it off with the final slice of bread which looks very similar to the first slice of bread (the conclusion). Practice building your own paragraph below. Pick a topic from the list below. Write a topic sentence on the piece of bread on the left that states what your paragraph is about. On each “filling”, write a supporting sentence containing more information about the main topic. Then, write a concluding sentence on the piece of bread on the right that restates the topic sentence and signals the paragraph is finished. On a separate piece of paper, rewrite your sentences as one cohesive paragraph.
